Globalizations And Social Movements

Globalizations and Social Movements

John Garry 2009-11-16 Globalization is a process of developments that are weakening national boundaries. Both transnational and local social movements develop to resist the process of globalization—political, economic, ideological, cultural. These global trends cover a wide range of issues and case studies, from environmental conflict, to neoliberal trade deals, to corporate crime, to human rights, and more. The new model of globalization is characterized by the diversification of international interactions, the growing role of non-state actors, and the expanding influence of cultural and normative factors. The globalization process is marked by the acceleration of capital flows, the relocation of industries, the spread of new technologies, and the growing interconnectedness of societies. This book is an analysis of the complex and multifaceted process of globalization and its impact on social movements. It explores the ways in which globalization has reshaped the landscape of social movements, and the ways in which social movements have responded to these changes. It also examines the role of globalization in shaping the political and economic landscape of the world today. [36]

Global Social Movements Robin Cohen 2000 (Globalization has more than one face. Global cultural and economic forces, particularly the dynamics of large corporations, shape the picture from above, but a new global consciousness, through the activities of social movements, is emerging from below. While states remain important actors, these new global social movements demonstrate that we are entering a post-national phase, with political actors becoming more unconventional, open, participatory, direct, and forward.)

Globalization, Nationalism, Tribalism Paul James 2006-04-20 Globalization is not new. The future of globalization is still in the making. Despite the failed attempts of the developed world during the course of the last century to control infectious diseases and even to eradicate some deadly afflictions, 15 million people worldwide still die from infectious disease every year. On April 15 and 17, 2002, the Forum on Emerging Infections held a working group discussion on the implications of globalization on the emergence and control of infectious diseases. The contents of the unattributed sections are based on the presentations and discussions that took place during the workshop. The Impact of Globalization on Infectious Disease Emergence and Control report summarizes the presentations and discussions related to the increasing cross-border and cross-continent movements of people and how this could exacerbate the emergence of infectious diseases.
